GOOD NEWS FOR HOMEMAKERS

JELLY MAKING

Many homemakers have been calling with questions concerning making jelly. This week we hope to include in Good News information that will help your jelly making be a success. There is nothing any better than good jelly on a cold winter morning. We also know that there is nothing any worse than an unsuccessful attempt at jelly making.

Pectin causes our jelly to jell. Pectin, a natural substance found in all fruits, makes jelly jell. The amount varies in different kinds of fruit, as well as in varieties of the same fruit. Natural fruit pectin in liquid or powdered form supplies this substance to take the guess work out of jelly making. Grandmother used to let jelly cook for a long time on the back of the wood stove in order for it to jell. She used the jelly test by spooning some of he jelly onto a saucer and setting it in the refrigerator. You, too, can use this test, but the most fool proof method is to use prepared pectin that can be purchased in a powder or liquid form.

Many of you have asked, "Can I use liquid and powdered pectins to do the same job?" Both pectins can be used to do the same job, but cannot be used interchangeably. The powdered pectin will not dissolve in a high sugar concentration so it must be added to the fruit before the sugar. The liquid pectin is added after the sugar. Each type of pectin has its own special recipes which must be followed exactly.

Not only is following the recipes exactly extremely important, but it is also extremely important to measure accurately and never double the quantity of jelly when preparing it. Sometimes homemakers think that they can get through the jelly making job in a hurry by doing more than one batch of fruit at a time, but this should never be done. In order to insure a success at jelly making, you must make only one batch of it at a time.

Fruits must be measured after they are crushed because fruits vary so much in size. We know that one cup of whole strawberries will not equal a cupful of crushed strawberries, so it is extremely important that we measure after the crushing has taken place. An excellent way to crush your fruit is with the blender if you have one.

Sometimes your jelly will weep. Separation of a small amount of syrup, frequently known as weeping, is normal and will not harm jellies or jams unless yeast and mold start growing on the seepage. To avoid excessive weeping, leave a half inch space at the top when filling the jelly glass or jar. Pour paraffin and store in a cool dry place.

Immediately after jelly or jam has been poured into the glasses, cover with a thin layer of paraffin, about 1/8 " thick and make sure the paraffin seals over to the edge of the jar. One tablespoon of melted paraffin usually gives the desired thickness for a jar of jam or jelly. Of course, freezer jams do not require this process.

Sometimes we have jellies and jams left over a year longer. They will keep this length of time if properly sealed and stored. The perfect place to store our canned goods of any kind is a cool dry place, with good air circulation. Damp cupboards tend to produce mold or fermentation. Too warm a temperature tends to produce sugar crystals, so it is extremely important that we store our jams and jellies or any canned goods in a cool dry place with good circulation of air.

Homemakers, the Appomattox County Extension Office is most happy to help you with your food preservation problems, whether it's jelly making, canning, freezing or pickle making. We are most happy to try to answer your questions. Should you have a question, you may call us at 352-8244 or write us at P. O. Box 488, Appomattox, Virginia 24522.

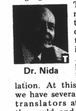
Little-Known Facts About Translating The Bible

By Dr. Eugene A. Nida

Q. What does the American Bible Society really do in terms of translation work?

A. First of all, we help people with language problems—sometimes even developing an alphabet in a language never before written.



Dr. Nida

Then we organize translation groups to do the work, training them in seminars. And we publish helpful books on translation. At this very moment we have several hundred local translators at work around the world, and a large number of translations consultants supervising the work.

It's not our policy to drum up enthusiasm for translation work, but primarily to respond intelligently to the concerns which people in the various churches express.

When I first came to the Bible Society some 30 years ago, most of the translators were foreign missionaries. But they were inevitably handicapped in the task of translating into a language which was not their mother tongue.

Now about 80 percent of these Bible translators come from the local churches, and many of them are well trained. In a number of cases missionaries continue to lend assistance, but the real responsibility rests with nationals. This is a sign of true life within the church.

● Dr. Eugene A. Nida, a distinguished Bible scholar and one of the world's foremost experts in language, has for over 30 years been in charge of Scripture translations at the American Bible Society, 1865 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10023.
